

ERIC MARCOTTE

Eric was born and raised in Saskatchewan, growing up in Estevan. From about the age of 10 years old, it was treated as an inevitability by his parents that he would become a lawyer, despite the fact that his parents were the owners of a plumbing business in Estevan.

Eric moved to Saskatoon in 2004 to attend university and met his wife at the end of his first year. While attending university, he learned the value of hard work in academics and to lifelong learning and betterment.

He moved to Regina after graduation in 2011 with two degrees to take a job at MacLean Keith Law firm, and joined the partnership in 2017. Eric and his wife have two wonderful boys. He considers himself lucky to have a career and work that he enjoys. Although people do not see lawyers as a “helping profession”, he truly believes that to be the case and gets enjoyment in assisting clients, to the best of his abilities, to resolve their conflicts. His work on the Board of the Collaborative Professionals of Saskatchewan has taught him that litigation is not always the best means to resolve conflict (though it is sometimes necessary).
